The Universal Primacy of Christ Francesco Saverio Pancheri, 1984 Noted Italian theologian and philosopher Francis Xavier Pancheri revisits a crucial question of the Middle Ages and shows its perennial importance for Christian society If the Incarnation is in some sense caused by the Fall of Adam and Eve then how can Christ be said to have primacy in all things The discussion amongst scholastic philosophers continues to have broad implications on the Christian understanding of free Will and Predestination the relationship between creation and Creator and the final things towards which all creation moves understanding Underwood seeks to facilitate mutual understanding among Christians who may worship differently who conceive of God and God's relations with humanity differently and who articulate their religious beliefs in terms and concepts that are unfamiliar to each other Readers of this book are invited to approach its sympathetic presentation of such Christian theologies including that of the Latter day Saints with an openness and curiosity that can lead to a more accurate nuanced understanding of the doctrines discussed
