University System And Economic Development In Mexico Since 1929:

The University System and Economic Development in Mexico Since 1929 David Lorey,1993-11-01 For decades Mexican leaders and scholars as well as outside observers have spoken of a Mexican university system in crisis expressing concern over student political activism and violence declining quality of instruction and facilities crowded campuses and lack of employment for graduates When the government harshly suppressed a student movement in 1968 world attention focused on the turmoil that was endemic in university life During the severe economic slump of the 1980s the fundamental weaknesses of the Mexican economy its inefficiency and inability to compete in the world were often attributed to failings of the university system Using original quantitative data on the graduates of all Mexican universities in a dozen major professional fields since 1929 the author explores the nature of this purported crisis by examining a series of questions about the Mexican university system How have the changing policy priorities of the Mexican government affected the university s education of professionals How have the Mexican economy s needs for professionals shaped the functioning of the university system Has Mexico trained enough professionals Have they been trained in the right fields Has the university been able to respond to demands for upward mobility through higher education The author s detailed analysis reveals a paradox to the extent that Mexican universities may not be producing the kinds of expertise needed for competing in the new global marketplace that educational quality has declined gradually over time and that the university has not contributed much to social mobility one may indeed speak of a crisis Yet because the university system has reached its present form in response to demands placed on it be government the economy and society responding pragmatically to circumstances beyond its control the author concludes that the crisis is not fundamentally a university crisis but rather one that lies in Mexican economy and society at large extent that Mexican universities may not be producing the kinds of expertise needed for competing in the new global marketplace that educational quality has declined gradually over time and that the university has not contributed much to social mobility one may indeed speak of a crisis Yet because the university system has reached its present form in response to demands placed on it by government the economy and society responding pragmatically to circumstances beyond its control the author concludes that the crisis is not fundamentally a university crisis but rather one that lies in Mexican economy and society at large Universities and Globalization Janice K. Currie, Janice Newson, 1998-08-18 In this volume the contributors consider globalization as combining a market ideology with a corresponding material set of practices drawn from the world of business Issues of managerialism privatization and accountability central values in business have become central for universities and their administrators as well The selections in the book help to illustrate the editors contentions that globalization presents clear disadvantages as well as benefits and that its effect on higher education is neither likely to be uniform nor the outcomes inevitable Higher Education Faculty in Mexico and the United States Cheryl D. Technology Transfer Via University-Industry Relations Maria Isabel Rivera Vargas, 2018-10-24 This book examines the technology that is transferred in Mexico's Silicon Valley and the role that institutions of higher education and foreign electronics corporations play in the process Rivera Vargas delineates that technology transfer is occurring describes its nature the channels of transfer and its level by focusing on the informal mechanisms of technology transfer Among the significant findings are that there has been very limited real technology transferred and that most of it is concentrated in operative level capabilities This study reveals that the lack of absorptive scientific and technological capacity as a factor often cited to explain transfer failure did not apply in the case of the region examined In point of fact the scientific and technological capacities exhibited in the region are superior to those in the Silicon Valley of the East in Malaysia during the 1970s and 1980s where some studies reported more significant technology transfer What then are the factors hindering technology transfer in some regions or promoting it in others This book explores some of the factors in play The Rise of the Professions in Twentieth-century Mexico David E.
