Immanuel His Name Shall Be Called Wonderful With such convictions the writer has approached this matchless theme and has studied to unfold it not in the lights Of speculation and fancy but only in that clear and sacred light which shines from the inspired pages He would seek to commend to every dying fellow man the personal character of the Redeemer as infinitely the most lovely and attractive Object that was ever revealed to the contemplation of the human mind But while commend ing it thus as containing our only possible hope of salva tion he has sought to present it in no other way than as it has been revealed to us by those who beheld his glory the glory as of the Only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth About the
