

STEROIDS AND NEUROINFLAMMATORY ACTIVITY

The neuroinflammatory response is a complex phenomenon involving a variety of cellular and molecular events. It is characterized by the infiltration of inflammatory cells into the central nervous system (CNS), the release of pro-inflammatory mediators, and the activation of microglia and astrocytes. The resulting tissue damage and neuronal dysfunction are hallmarks of neuroinflammation. Steroids, particularly glucocorticoids, have been extensively studied for their effects on the neuroinflammatory response. They are known to exert potent anti-inflammatory effects, and their use in the treatment of various neurological conditions is well established. This review discusses the mechanisms of steroid action in the context of neuroinflammation, focusing on their effects on the immune system, the release of inflammatory mediators, and the activation of glial cells. The potential for steroid-induced side effects and the development of steroid-sparing agents are also discussed.
