The Book of Filial Duty, The Hsiao Ching or Book of Filial Duty is generally held to be the work of an unknown pupil of Ts'ung Ts'an the disciple of Confucius to whom is attributed the famous Confucian classic known as The Greater Learning Certainly it can be traced back as far as 400 B C within a century from the death of Confucius The preservation of the text in its present form is due to the Emperor Ming Huang A D 685 762 one of the most fascinating characters in Chinese history who had it engraved together with eleven other of the Confucian writings on tablets of stone and set up in his capital of Chang'an He afterwards added a commentary of his own which is still extant and has proved invaluable to all commentators of a later period The Book of Filial Duty is often found in China bound up with another treatise called the Hsiao Hsueh or Teaching for the Young of which the following is a specimen The way to become a student is with meekness and humility receiving with confidence every word spoken by the master The pupil when he sees men of virtue should try to follow in their steps when he hears wise sayings he should try to conform to them He must not harbour evil designs but always act honourably Whether at home or abroad he must have a fixed abode and resort with those who are well disposed regulating his demeanour with care and curbing the passions Few books have enjoyed greater popularity amongst all classes in China than The Book of Filial Duty It may be called The Book of Emperors from the fact that so many Emperors both before and after Ming Huang have commented upon it Equally it is The Book of Youth being the first treatise of importance placed in the hands of children after the horn books of elementary instruction The reason for its survival after so many centuries is not hard to seek Family life has always been from time immemorial the foundation stone of the Chinese Empire and filial piety is the foundation stone of family life Nor does this duty of son to father merely extend to the living The living head of the family pays due reverence to the countless ancestors who have preceded him A witty Chinese writer once remarked that in the West family life only began after death in the family vault Here at any rate after years of separation and divided interests the members met to enjoy a common oblivion I cannot but think that there is some exaggeration in this yet not even the greatest apologist of Western methods will venture to deny that the Chinese and indeed most Oriental ideals of family life are superior to his own Whilst living only the calls of Empire or the demands of their profession may keep relations apart but the interests of the family are always greater than the interests of the individual and no exile is without hope of return to the home of his fathers The dead will not be forgotten for it will be the duty of their sons to offer sacrifice to their shades The death days of two generations of parents are kept sacred with solemn festival and the nameless and unnumbered dead have their special days of ceremony and remembrance in the spring and autumn Every house has its family shrine every village its hall of ancestors Thus the filial piety of the survivors honours those who have gone

Filial Piety in Chinese Thought and History Alan Chan, Sor-Hoon Tan, 2004-08-02 The phenomenon of filial piety is fundamental to our understanding of Chinese culture and this excellent collection of essays explores its role in various areas of life throughout history Often regarded as the key to preserving Chinese tradition and identity its potentially vast impact on government and the development of Chinese culture makes it extremely relevant and although invariably virtuous in its promotion of social cohesion its ideas are often controversial A broad range of topics are discussed chronologically including Confucianism Buddhism and Daoism making it essential reading for those studying Chinese culture religion and philosophy This is a multi disciplinary survey that combines historical studies with philosophical analysis from an international team of respected contributors

C. Abbott,2017-06-22 CHAPTER I RESPONSIBILITY In large cities there are so many persons guilty of crimes that it is necessary to have a court sit every day to try those who are accused of breaking the laws This court is called the Police Court If you should go into the room where it is held you would see the constables bringing in one after another of miserable and wicked creatures and after stating and proving their crimes the judge would command them to be led away to prison They would look so wretched that you would be shocked in seeing them One morning a poor woman came into the Police Court in Boston Her eyes were red with weeping and she seemed to be borne down with sorrow Behind her followed two men leading in her daughter Here sir said a man to the judge is a girl who conducts so badly that her mother cannot live with her and she must be sent to the House of Correction My good woman said the judge what is it that your daughter does which renders it so uncomfortable to live with her Oh sir she replied it is hard for a mother to accuse her own daughter and to be the means of sending her to the prison But she conducts so as to destroy all the peace of my life She has such a temper that she sometimes threatens to kill me and does every thing to make my life wretched The unhappy woman could say no more Her heart seemed bursting with grief and she wept aloud The heart of the judge was moved with pity and the bystanders could hardly refrain from weeping with this afflicted mother But there stood the hard hearted girl unmoved She looked upon the sorrows of her parent in sullen silence She was so hardened in sin that she seemed perfectly insensible to pity or affection And yet she was miserable Her countenance showed that passion and malignity filled her heart and that the fear of the prison to which she knew she must go filled her with rage The judge turned from the afflicted mother whose sobs filled the room and asking a few questions of the witnesses who testified to the daughter s ingratitude and cruelty ordered her to be led away to the House of Correction The officers of justice took her by the arm and carried her to her gloomy cell Her lonely and sorrowing mother went weeping home to her abode of penury and desolation Her own daughter was the viper which had stung her bosom Her own child was the wretch who was filling her heart with sorrow And while I now write this guilty daughter is occupying the gloomy cell of the prison and this widowed mother is in her silent dwelling in loneliness and grief Oh could the child who reads these pages see that mother and that daughter now you might form some feeble idea of the consequences of disobedience you might see how unutterable the sorrow a wicked child may bring upon herself and upon her parents It is not easy in this case to judge which is the most unhappy the mother or the child The mother is broken hearted at
