Geoffrey E. Wood, Philip James

The Invisible Hand Economic Equilibrium In The History Of Science:

The Invisible Hand Bruna Ingrao, Giorgio Israel, 1990 This study of the fundamental theoretical underpinnings of modern economies examines how economists define and categorize the market It suggests that modeling a social science such as economics on the physical mathematical sciences has created intractable problems and that the basic structure of the theory needs rethinking A meticulously researched work in the field of mathematical economics and pure theory The Invisible Hand traces the evolution of general economic equilibrium theory in its rich interaction with the physical sciences over a period of more than 150 years The authors discuss how the invisible hand that balances physical processes was inspiration and model for the creation of general economic equilibrium theory Ingrao and Israel review fundamental concepts of the theory showing how its early forms strictly analogous to mechanical equilibrium arose from the cultural atmosphere generated by Newtonianism and the French Enlightenment They describe developments and changes in the theory from the work of Leon Walras and Vilfredo Pareto through restructuring by the Vienna group and John Von Neumann and the contributions of the Robbins group at the London School of Economics to its current formulations in the work of Irving Fisher Paul Samuelson Kenneth Arrow and Gerard Debreu Concluding chapters survey the results obtained in attempts to deal with questions of the existence of equilibrium its uniqueness and the problem of global stability Ingrao and Israel find that the theory has arrived at a dead end which raises serious doubts about the internal consistency of the basic model Bruna Ingrao is Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Sassari and Giorgio Israel is Associate Professor of Mathematics at the University of Rome
