British Medical Journal ,1898 The Mental Health Aspects of Trafficking in Human Beings ,2004 The Curability of Insanity and the Individualized Treatment of the Insane John Simpkins Butler, 1887 I believe strictly recent insanity in very many cases is radically curable under the prompt persistent and united use of medical and moral means These to be efficient demand individualized application i.e. that same immediate close and sharp personal service which the general practitioner necessarily gives to the early stages of typhus diphtheria cholera etc Individualized treatment is called for in insanity as imperatively as in the case of acute forms of other physical disease The form of treatment is different according as the practitioner is hopefully working for a cure in an acute case or as in some chronic case of long standing he is simply administering palliation and general care The first requires his personal and persistent attention the second may be treated in a general way and may be committed to others This power essential to the largest success is limited as in all individual efforts by number Applicable to the few it cannot be extended to the many While here and there it may reach one in a crowd the general result proves the limitation I not only discuss the treatment of chronic insanity but its prevention PsycINFO Database Record c 2005 APA all rights reserved International Record of Medicine and General Practice Clinics Edward Swift Dunster,James Bradbridge Hunter, Frank Pierce Foster, Charles Eucharist de Medicis Sajous, Gregory Stragnell, Henry J.
